Erasmus+ Youth Exchange in Spain: Europath

EuroPath is a youth exchange designed to introduce young people to the European projects ecosystem, its roles (from youth worker to project developer), its opportunities, and its potential as a career and civic path. It targets participants with mixed levels of prior exposure to Erasmus+ and European programmes, making the exchange relevant both to those who have never heard of a Youth Exchange and to those who have participated as beneficiaries but never as promoters or project managers.

The exchange operates on a simple but powerful narrative arc: participants arrive as individuals with their own national contexts and leave with a shared understanding of how the European projects' landscape works, what opportunities exist within it, and, crucially, what their own next steps could look like.

Across the five working days, participants build together the EuroPath Map: a living, collaborative document that layers their collective knowledge of youth work and social action across their countries, the funding opportunities available to them, and the project ideas they generate during the exchange. The Map is the output of EuroPath, something real that exists after the last participant has gone home.
